The People's Vote for Independence

Ballot summary and background	International law, as is found in the International Covenant On Civil And Political Rights, states that “all peoples have the right of self-determination”. This means that descendants of slaves (termed Afrodescendants by the United Nations) and the indigenous to this land have a right to choose to be part of and subject to the current government or choose to govern themselves under their own independent political control.
Action voted for	We the undersigned Afrodescendants or indigenous, identifying as The People (Al-Ummah) wish to withdraw consent from the current government and its activities and consent to an independent government council from " The People" in this territory upon which we dwell.
